

AL PARDUE'S PENSACOLA STOOGES

If there's anything modelers seem to be able to count on in this highly uncertain craft, it's that the wind will change sometime during a major contest at Pensacola and you'll have to move. Al Pardue, that highly creative Alabaman, has come up with a solution to this. Need to mover because the wind has changed? No problem, just toss the model in the car and drive to the new flying spot. As you can see, the construction of the stooge is straightforward — all you need is a trailer hitch.
